Our partnership delivered a gain of +44.8% net of all fees, expenses, and allocations for the full year 2025. What would have already been considered a satisfactory year through September turned into a stellar year, thanks to our partnership's performance in the fourth quarter.

While we are quite happy with the result, we would like to be clear that years like 2025 are not something we expect to repeat with any regularity. Volatility is often an admission price for pursuing exceptional long-term returns, and we expect there will inevitably be periods where our performance looks very different than it did this year. Ultimately, the only yardstick that matters to us is our long-term CAGR, and we are pleased with the rate of compounding that we have delivered to our partners since inception.

Our fourth quarter gains were driven primarily by our investment in D-BOX Technologies ("D-BOX"), a Canadian-based micro-cap company which became a material holding during the second half of 2025.[7] In December 2025, we shared an investment memorandum detailing our thoughts on D-BOX, which can be found here for anyone interested. D-BOX is a position we continue to own with conviction.

We have long maintained that finding just one or two exceptional ideas each year, and sizing them appropriately, should be sufficient to enable us to generate satisfactory returns. We were fortunate to find and build significant positions in two companies last year, Dadelo and D-BOX, each of which experienced a triple-digit percentage share price gain in 2025, and together accounted for a meaningful share of our performance.[7] The global investible universe remains vast, and with some luck, we hope and expect to continue to find what we believe to be asymmetric opportunities that contribute to our future performance.

Equally important is limiting mistakes. Last year, we believe we did a decent job on that front, as measured by the frequency and magnitude of our position-level losses. I am far from immune from making mistakes, however, and have made plenty over the years. Near year-end, for only the second time since Sohra Peak's founding (which has not been often enough), I thoroughly reviewed every partnership investment since inception that resulted in a loss. For every loss that reflected a mistake rather than bad luck, I wanted to try and understand exactly where my thinking went wrong, and what I could have done differently.

The review was humbling, but also clarifying. I found that many of the same mistake patterns repeated themselves far more often than I imagined. While it is never fun to re-live the decisions that cost money, I've come to appreciate this as an invaluable exercise, as every investor is sure to carry a set of blind spots. What seems to matter is whether we are willing to address them, with intellectual honesty, and do what we can to reduce them. To that end, I plan to revisit this post-mortem regularly and scrutinize future mistakes more frequently, and as a result, hope to make better decisions and incur fewer avoidable losses over time.

Approaching New Subscription Limit

At the moment, we are open to accepting an additional $3 million in new subscriptions. Once our threshold is reached, we intend to close the partnership to new subscriptions forever. For much of the past year, we have anticipated reaching a point when we would intend to stop accepting new capital into our partnership. It appears that point may be soon approaching.

As expressed, we desire to always maintain a capital base small and nimble enough that allows us to invest in our highest conviction ideas with sufficient concentration. Our goal remains focused on responsibly maximizing investment returns rather than maximizing assets under management. The way we view it, this approach mitigates risk to the durability of our future returns on capital, just as we would expect our portfolio company CEOs to think about their businesses. We also feel we are doing the right thing by our valued partners. Preserving the quality of our partners remains our top business priority. We look forward to meeting likeminded prospective investors.

As always, I would like to extend a thank you to all of our outstanding limited partners, including those of you who have recently joined our partnership, for your steadfast commitment and trust. It is the outstanding quality of our limited partners, a total count which is now over 60, that allows our partnership to maintain its long-term orientation over investments, withstand volatility, and realize as best as possible our goal of compounding our capital at the highest rate of return that we responsibly can.

Transitioning to Semi-Annual Letter Cadence

A year ago, I shared my thoughts regarding how at some point in the future, I would plan to transition our investor letters from a quarterly to a semi-annual cadence. I have made the decision that, following this letter, our partnership's letters will transition to being written and shared at a semi-annual cadence.

As much as I genuinely enjoy writing to each of you with updates on our partnership's operations, writing thoughtful updates has proven to require significant time, and comes with a meaningful opportunity cost, time that could be spent focused on our investments. Additionally, I've long believed that semi-annual letters strike the right balance between providing our partners with timely updates and aligning the frequency of our updates with our long-term investment horizon. As a result, I hope that this transition will be incrementally beneficial for our partnership.

Administratively, everything else will remain unchanged. All limited partners will continue to receive monthly capital account statements from our fund administrator. Should any partners wish to chat at more frequent intervals, please know that my door is always open. I'd be happy to hear from you.

Administrative

Our audit and tax service provider Cherry Bekaert will be preparing the limited partner K-1 tax forms. Spicer Jeffries, our partnership's audit & tax service provider, was recently acquired by Cherry Bekaert, now the fifth-largest hedge fund auditor in the U.S. ranked by number of SEC-registered hedge funds audited.[8] Your K-1 forms should be available to you by the end of March, hopefully sooner.

Portfolio Updates

Our partners are encouraged to read our commentary on our partnership's top 5 holdings in Appendix A attached to the end of this letter.

Closing Thoughts

Thank you for taking an interest in our latest letter. I am excited about our partnership's future.

I remain confident that our partnership's north star will always be to compound our capital at the highest rate of return responsibly possible. In some respects, this approach may render our partnership uninvestible by many institutional investors. That is perfectly fine by me. We will continue to accept as partners only those who understand, and who are aligned with, our objective.

If you wish to learn more about the partnership, please feel free to reach out to me directly. Our partnership currently welcomes introductions to new investors who are aligned with our philosophy and our long-term approach. Readers interested in receiving future letters can register at our website www.sohrapeakcapital.com.

I value the trust you have placed in me to invest your hard-earned capital, as the substantial majority of my own wealth is presently invested alongside yours. I look forward to writing to you again soon.

Most Sincerely,

Jonathan A. Cukierwar, CFA
Manager of Sohra Peak Partnership LLC, the General Partner of Sohra Peak Capital Partners LP
